The Four Feathers. With trouble percolating in the Sudan young Harry Feversham, contemplating a lengthy deployment and separation from his fiancée, resigns his commission in the Regiment with the intention of settling down and starting life with his new wife. His comrades-in-arms view his decision in a different light, and three fellow officers, his close friends, express their reaction by delivering white feathers - an accusation of cowardice - to Harry. When his fiancée learns what has happened, she breaks the engagement.and delivers a fourth white feather. With his life in ruins and the cloud of cowardice hanging over his name, Harry undertakes an incredible odyssey to prove his courage and redeem himself by returning the four feathers and gaining an admission from those who delivered them that he is not, after all a coward. A.E.W. Mason Alfred Edward Woodley Mason was born in London on May 7, 1865 and educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he was a leading member of the Dramatic Society and contemplated a theatrical career, appearing in productions on the London stage during the late 1880s. He began writing during this period, seeing his first novel, A Romance of Wastdale, published in 1895. A commercial failure, it was quickly followed by The Courtship of Maurice Buckler (1896), which was well-received and commercially successful,...
